

Mary Shapiro
Canton, MA

Mary focuses on strategic planning, leadership and gender, team building and intervention, influence, and strategic career management as a professor at Simmons School of Business. For 25 years she has taught MBA, undergraduate and executive education courses on these topics. As a consultant she works with teams in public and Fortune 500 companies. In her research and publications, she focuses on women, their careers and their relationships with power and risk-taking. Most recently she led a partnership between Simmons College and GSEMA exploring the impact being a Girl Scout has on a young girl's self-confidence and career ambitions. She has co-authored two books on careers and most recently has published a new book, Leading High Performing Teams, through Harvard Business School Press. She was a Girl Scout troop leader for 12 years, Canton's town coordinator for four years, and Girl Scouts Patriots' Trail council board member for six years. Mary has been a member of the council's Board of Directors since 2008, currently as first vice chair. She has an MBA and a master's degree in economics from Wright State University in Ohio.
