

Abigail C.
Girl Scout Ambassador

Abby is high school junior and has been a Girl Scout since Daisy level. She earned her Bronze Award for starting a grant-sponsored book club at a local elementary school, and her Silver Award for running workshops at a local senior home. She is pursuing her Gold Award by creating an interactive website highlighting the stories of local veterans. At school she is a freshman mentor and member of the science club, history club, quiz bowl team, tennis team, student government, model United Nations, and the school paper. Abby volunteers at Lexington Historical Society, assists in teaching dance classes at Center Stage Dance Studio, and interns at the LEEFE lab at Tufts University, learning about environmental epidemiological research. She strives to be a role model for girls who envision themselves in STEM and leadership positions. Abby envisions herself doing research in epidemiology or microbiology, along with staying active in the Girl Scout community.
